PEACE TERMS; ARMISTICE

Military Writer Gives Interesting Historical Precedents.

(Gen. Francis Vinton Greene, in New York Times.)

Every armistice is a truce, but not every truce is an armistice. One is generic, the other is specific. A truce is usually temporary, an armistice is almost always ended by being merged into a permanent treaty of peace.

A truce may be arranged between persons, natural or corporate, in time of peace; an armistice is a suspension of hostilities between armies at war, definitely arranged in writing between the commanders of the army.

It is prepared and his signified its willingness to surrender, to give up its arms, to change its status from that of combatants to prisoners of war, then the commander in the field is able to deal with the matter without any instructions from his government. Our own wars furnish numerous examples of this—Saratoga, Yorktown, Donelson, Vicksburg, Appomattox, Santiago, Manila—in each case the enemy had agreed to surrender its arms and an armistice of a few hours or days was arranged in order to work out the details. But if a commanding general undertakes to stipulate terms of peace in his armistice or his terms of surrender he does so at his peril. The classic case is that of Sherman's armistice with Johnston in 1865, which was disavowed by his government, and he was instructed to demand that the enemy surrender as prisoners of war, leaving the terms of peace to be determined by the government.

Similarly in Europe, the surrenders of the armies at Sedan, Metz, Plevna, and Skva were simply military capitulations, the details of which had been arranged in armistices of brief duration which contained no reference to the terms of peace.

It is nevertheless true that wars almost invariably end in an armistice. But this takes place only when the terms of peace have been agreed upon. Such agreement is an act of the sovereign or treaty-making power and not of the military commander. In our war with Spain, when Spain was hopelessly beaten she authorized the French ambassador at Washington to enter into a written protocol with the American secretary of state in which Spain definitely agreed to relinquish her sovereignty over Cuba, to cede Porto Rico to the United States and to determine the future of the Philippines by a treaty of peace to be negotiated in Paris.

It was only after the fundamentals of peace had been definitely agreed upon that the president sent instructions, on Aug. 12, 1898, to the military commanders to suspend hostilities by means of armistices. These continued until the treaty of peace was ratified six months later.

When Turkey was at the mercy of Russia in January, 1878, Turkish plenipotentiaries were sent through the lines to meet Russian plenipotentiaries at Adrianople. It was only after they had agreed upon terms of peace that an armistice was ordered on Jan. 31. This continued until the definitive treaty was signed on March 3.

When France was defeated in 1870 her representatives endeavored from October to January to obtain an armistice, but the Germans refused to grant one until the essential features of the treaty of peace had been agreed upon, on Jan. 23. These included the capitulation of Paris, the cession of territory, and payment of indemnity, and the same document contained the armistice, which continued in effect until it was automatically superseded by the treaty of Frankfurt on May 10.

Similar proceedings marked the termination of all the wars of the nineteenth century, to wit: plenipotentiaries of the sovereign or treaty-making powers agreed upon the fundamental terms of peace, and after that had been done, then the army commanders arranged the suspension of hostilities by means of an armistice.

A moment's consideration will show that no other course is feasible or possible now. The allied rulers cannot, if they would, shirk their responsibility and throw it upon Marshal Foch. They must decide the issues for which men have been giving their lives for more than four years, and until these are decided the fighting must go on. No armistice of Foch could make—save the laying down of German arms—could fail to be of enormous benefit to our enemies and corresponding detriment to ourselves and our allies. For during the armistice Germany would replenish her stores of ammunition. No guarantees that Germany could give, not even the occupation of her Rhine fortresses, would compensate for the restoration of equality in the matter of armament and projectiles.

LUDENDORFF RESIGNS

Step Further Shakes Belief in Military Machine.

London, Oct. 28.—(British Wireless Press).—Official announcement was made in Berlin Saturday night that Emperor William had accepted the request of Gen. Ludendorff, the first quartermaster-general, that he be permitted to resign.

General surprise was caused in Berlin on Saturday afternoon by the fact that the daily report from German headquarters was not signed, as usual, with the name of Gen. Ludendorff. Later the following official announcement was issued.

"The emperor, accepting the request to be allowed to retire of Gen. Ludendorff, of infantry, the first quartermaster-general, and commander in time of peace of the 25th infantry brigade, has placed him on the unattached list. The emperor decided at the same time that the lower Rhinish infantry regiment No. 29, of which the general has long been chief, shall bear henceforth the name of Ludendorff."

His resignation, it is believed in London, will still further shake the faith of the German people in their military machine.
